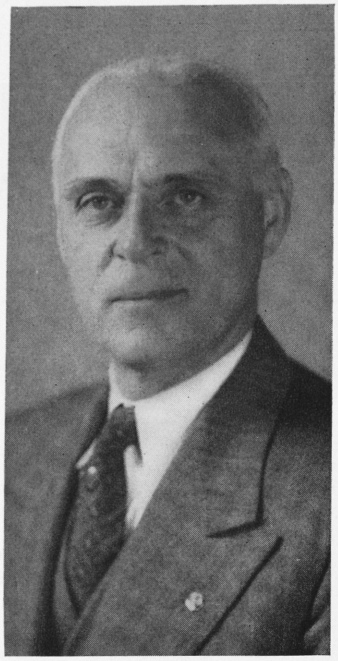
Entered at the Middlebury, Vt., Post Office as second-class matter



Professor Perley Conant Voter for more than 40 years a member of the Middlebury faculty died of a heart ailment on June 12 at the age of 63.

At the funeral services held in Mead Memorial Chapel on Monday, June 15, President Samuel S. Stratton delivered the following eulogy:

"Many of you have known Professor Voter for longer than I. Some of you remember him as a young scholar come to us from his graduate work at Harvard University where he was a founder of the Alpha Chi Sigma Chemistry fraternity and where he gave instruction to James Conant so recently become President Emeritus of Harvard University. You will recall too his enthusiastic and competent efforts in blazing the Long Trail over our Vermont Green Mountains. You know of the vigorous young leadership which has given to us a nationally recognized Department of Chemistry.

"It has been my privilege to have had Professor Voter as my colleague and true friend for ten years. I shall not speak of his deeply appreciated services as Chairman of the Division of Natural Sciences and Head of our Department of Chemistry. Our Middlebury family knows well the responsibilities and the authority which have so long rested on his shoulders. More personally I want to say that no matter how great our loss of a distinguished professor and administrator our sorrow today is for the loss to us of a friend—a gentleman and a scholar in the old-fashioned and best meaning of that phrase. Professor Voter had the innate courtesy which is the hallmark, I think, of a gentleman. It was a gentleness and a kindliness that came from his heart. We shall never forget his spontaneous smile, his willingness to listen quietly to all viewpoints, his firmness when he arrived at his studied decisions. He was ever loyal to our college. The knowledge and the meaning of loyalty was inbred in him—family, country, students, his profession, our college. He always took his stand and we all knew where he stood.

"At the many Alumni meetings which I attended this spring I have always responded to the always asked question—"Vote is well and all goes well with the Chemistry Department." Whatever reputation a college achieves, its faculty is chiefly responsible for it. It is not buildings nor traditions nor even wealth that give distinction to a college. Colleges are founded, they grow, they survive all difficulties because of the devotion of a dedicated faculty who believe in young people and gladly teach them. Middlebury is a better college today because since 1911 Perley Conant Voter gladly, competently, and courteously dedicated his life to students, to his profession, to Middlebury College. We, who carry on now, pray that whether in difficulties or triumphs we may be guided by the modest, kindly, loyal, scholarly example of our cherished colleague."

Professor Voter is survived by his wife, Mrs. Anne Crossland Voter; a daughter, Mrs. Muriel Williams, '37, of Cambridge, Mass., wife of Dr. Carroll Williams, professor at Harvard University; a son, Roger Conant Voter of Wilmington, Del.; and five grandchildren, John, Wesley, and Peter Williams, and William and James Voter.

REPORTING THE STUDENT SIDE OF MIDDLEBURY NEWS

Steaming towards Long Beach, California, and a summer's training with the U. S. Navy's Reserve Officer Candidate Program are four Middlebury College members. They are, left to right: Philip F. Norcross, Jr., '54; William D. Burden, Jr., '55; Edgar A. Kniffin, Jr., '54; and, Douglas O. Hanau, '54. At the completion of two summer training periods, and graduation from Middlebury, these students will be commissioned Ensigns in the Naval Reserve.

Three seniors have been awarded Fulbright fellowships which entitles them to a year's study abroad with all expenses paid. The Fulbright award winners are: Edward B. Perrin for study in Scotland, Nancy E. Peck for study in France and John W. Griese for study in the Philippines. For Middlebury's class of 1953 it was the third Fulbright grant won to date, the most ever gained by a Middlebury class.

Edward S. Hickcox, Jr., '53, has been granted a scholarship for graduate study at Wesleyan University. He will receive $3200 for a two-year period of work combining education with his English major. The Middlebury track team has ended the domination of the University of Vermont over the Panthers for several years! Coach Arthur Brown's track team defeated Vermont by winning 69⅓ points to only 45⅔ points by UVM in a triangular meet held at Burlington. Norwich University, the other team in the meet, managed to score only 20 points and finished in last place.

Upson, stepbrother to Mr. Hasenoehrl, made the presentation to Professor Werner Neuse, head of the German Department and Director of the College's German Summer School.

The painting shows an Alpine landscape with cows being driven down by herdsmen from their summer meadows to their winter quarters in the valley. According to custom both men and beasts are decorated with flowers in this typical scene of Austrian Alpine scenery and folkways. Professor Neuse plans to hang the painting in the German classroom in Munroe Hall and in Pearsons Hall during the summer session.

Alumni in the Headlines

Thomas H. Noonan, '91, 87-year-old New York Supreme Court referee, ended his work in that post recently in Buffalo, N. Y.

Judge Noonan, who rose to Supreme Court justice and finally to referee without benefits of law school, retired from office on April 30th.

But it won't be complete retirement.

The venerable jurist plans to be at his County Hall desk daily following his official retirement—"just to clean up a few matters left hanging."

Said Judge Noonan: "Though I'll no longer be an official, I hope to be around for quite a while."

Fellow referees, judges, attorneys and all others who know him echo his hopes.

Judge Noonan became Buffalo City Court judge in 1912 and held that post until 1920 when he became a County Court judge. From 1926 to 1935 he was a Supreme Court justice.

Since 1935, when Judge Noonan became a referee, he has heard some 8,000 cases. More than 6,500 were matrimonial controversies.

Several years ago he granted a woman an annulment on the ground her husband concealed a previous police record—a conviction for reckless driving.

It was the first and probably the only time in New York State that such a charge was the primary issue in an annulment suit.

"The husband defaulted by non-appearance. The wife wanted the decree and they didn't like each other anyway," Judge Noonan remarked.

Though a "liberal" in granting decrees in matrimonial actions, he does not favor broadening of the divorce laws to include other grounds than adultery.

Judge Noonan was born in Ferrisburgh, Vt., in 1865, and in 1870 his parents moved to Addison, Vt., where the jurist-to-be spent his childhood on a 500-acre farm.

A brother, William Noonan, now owns the farm and twice each year Judge Noonan pays a visit to his childhood home and to attend commencement exercises at Middlebury College.

After graduation from Middlebury the study of law interested him. So he went to Regis Falls, Franklin County, in New York State, where he began his studies.

He later worked in other law offices in Potsdam and Watertown. In 1894, he took the state bar association test in Utica, passed with flying colors.

The going was tough at first. Judge Noonan came to Buffalo and "couldn't get a job." Clients were few and far between.

"So I drew on my meager savings," he recalls, and got desk space in a law office and kept on plodding. "By 1909 I was doing pretty well," he added.

He has been doing "pretty well" ever since.

Judge Noonan has heard cases in each of the eight counties of the Eighth Judicial District. He has presided over 16 first-degree murder trials, one of which was the first ever held in an Erie County Court.

One morning alone, as a City Court judge, he disposed of some 200 cases, mostly disorderly conduct charges. "Got rid of the whole shooting match in four hours," he recalls.

After dissolving perhaps more marriages than any other jurist in Erie County, what would Referee Noonan advise young persons who wish to avoid a broken marriage?

Mr. Noonan, always forthright, answered: "None. They wouldn't take it anyway."

And to the final question, "What do you plan to do when you retire?" he answered with a laugh: "Just loaf."

The 1953 Commencement

Judge Harold R. Medina of New York City delivered the Commencement Address and received an honorary Doctor of Laws degree at the Commencement exercises marking the completion of Middlebury's 153rd academic year on June 8th. (Please turn to Page 12 for a copy of the Commencement Address.)

Bachelor of Arts degrees were awarded to 236 men and women and eleven others received advanced degrees.

Also receiving honorary Doctor of Laws degree were Hall Park McCullough of Bennington, New York Lawyer and Middlebury Trustee; Horace S. Ford, Treasurer Emeritus of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Middlebury Trustee; and James Scott Kemper, Chicago Insurance Executive.

Harry G. Owen, '23, Rutgers University Dean and former Director of the Bread Loaf School of English, received a Doctor of Education degree. Miss Helen Kenyon, Public Welfare Leader from New Haven, Conn., was awarded the degree of Doctor of Humanities.

Dr. Theodore Rogers Waugh, a native of St. Albans and Professor of Pathology at McGill University, was given an honorary Doctor of Science degree.

In his remarks to the graduating class at the Baccalaureate Service on Sunday, June 7, Dr. John A. Hutchison, Professor of Religion at Williams College, said in part:

"First, I hope you will take the love of wisdom, for that surely is the hallmark of an educated person. As to wisdom, your instructors have satisfied themselves that you have acquired at least the necessary minimum; otherwise you would not be here this morning. But the love of wisdom is harder to measure or test. Wisdom is the highest kind of knowledge; in any field of learning it is knowledge about the most important things. Information you can always look up in a manual or a chart; wisdom and love of wisdom you either have in your mind and heart or you don't have it at all. I hope your four years here have taught you to love wisdom with all your heart and soul and mind.

"Second, I hope you have room in your pack for faith. Now the very use of the word, faith, arouses misunderstanding. To many people, particularly on a college campus, faith means intellectual assent; and often it carries the meaning of assent beyond or against factual evidence. It means believing the unbelievable, the incredible. As the Sunday School boy had it, it means "believing what you know ain't so."

"This surely is not faith but a ridiculous caricature which of late has gained appallingly wide circulation. By faith I mean the attitude which leads you to bet your life on something. It means venture, decision. "Faith," said Williams James, "is a tendency to action." It also means trust—the sort of personal trust which characterizes human friendship or love."

President Samuel S. Stratton conferred the honorary degrees, citing the recipients, in part, as follows:

HAROLD R. MEDINA—"For your patience in upholding the legal rights of the accused in the trial of Communists charged with conspiracy to overthrow our government, and for your resilience to their obstructive and frustrating tactics, we honor you."

JAMES SCOTT KEMPER—"An eminently successful business executive who has been ever willing to assume the obligations of an enlightened and public-spirited citizen by cheerfully working without stint for causes we hold to be meritorious."

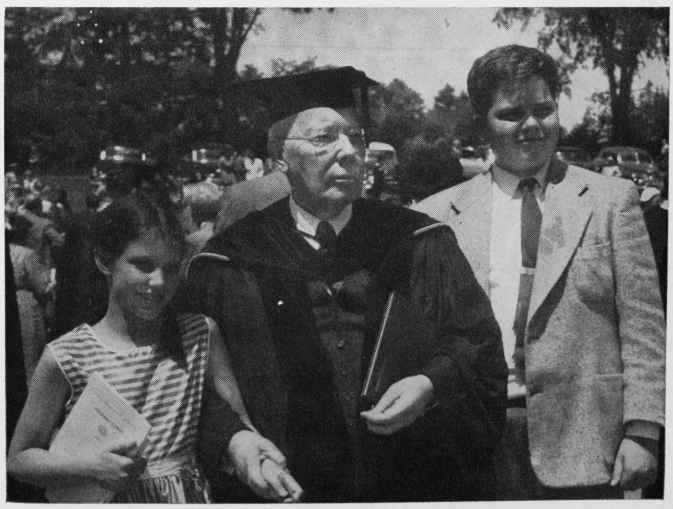
HARRY GODDARD OWEN—"We honor you because you gave leadership to the Middlebury College Bread Loaf School of English. Graduates love and admire that unique institution which still bears the stamp of your own design."

HORACE SAYFORD FORD—"For many years wise, able, and kindly administrator of the financial and business affairs of a great educational institution, you have won the esteem of all who understand the importance of sound business management for higher education."

HALL PARK McCULLOUGH—"We cite you as a devoted trustee of Middlebury College for 34 years, an outstanding member of the New York Bar, a man always interested in young people, and a wise critic and observer of trends in higher education."

HELEN KENYON—"As one-time chairman of the board of trustees of Vassar College and holder of numerous posts in organizations devoted to the public welfare, you have earned the respect and affection of your friends and associates."

THEODORE ROGERS WAUGH—"We are proud to recognize a native son of Vermont. Many generations of medical students of McGill University have gone forth wiser for your keen instruction; and for many years patients at the Royal Victoria Hospital have benefited directly from your knowledge of pathology."



Hall Park McCullough, founder of Bennington College and for 29 years a Trustee of Middlebury, is shown with his grandchildren following the exercises. He received the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws.

Seven honorary degrees were awarded by Middlebury College during Commencement exercises on June 8. Recipients of the degrees are shown above with President Samuel S. Stratton who conferred the degrees. Standing, left to right, are Dr. Theodore R. Waugh of McGill University; Horace S. Ford, Treasurer Emeritus of M.I.T. and Middlebury Trustee; James S. The President's Page

In order to allow room in this issue of the NEWS LETTER for the reprinting of Judge Harold R. Medina's prepared Commencement address of June 8th, I am turning over to him the President's Page of this issue of the NEWS LETTER

Samuel S. Stratton

I VERY MUCH APPRECIATE the honor and privilege of addressing you today. It is especially pleasing to me to come to a real, honest-to-goodness liberal arts college as I consider myself a real, honest-to-goodness humanist; for I was trained as an undergraduate at Princeton in the disciplines of the Department of Modern Languages and Literatures and I became an enthusiastic follower of that great American liberal Christian Gauss. It was he who first taught me to think; it was he who so stimulated my interest in the great works and the cultures of France and Spain that I all but abandoned my plan to be a lawyer for a career in the teaching of romance languages; and the proudest day of my life was that on which, only a year or so before he died, Dean Gauss confided to me that I was his favorite pupil.

And so I shall address you as a humanist and my subject is "Security." My thesis will be that there is no security in material things; it is mere illusion to suppose that one can purchase security or attain it otherwise than by the development of our personal resources as individual human beings. The most valuable and precious things in life cannot be bought by money. Security is one of these.

Now let me sketch a little background. One of the great French writers of all time is Montaigne and you may have noticed that he keeps referring every now and then to a boyhood friend Etienne de La Boetie. This La Boetie was an extraordinary fellow. He had ideas and he knew how to express them—the sort of ideas that dance and sparkle in your mind—the sort of ideas that have dynamic force and make people do things. He is best known today by a little book with the title "La Servitude Voluntaire ou le Contr'un" and in it he developed the thought that Frenchmen were making slaves of themselves by the worship of the oriflamme and la sainte ampoule. The royal pennant led them into battle and symbolized that reckless bravery which was and long thereafter remained the envy of military men of other nations. La sainte ampoule contained the ointment said to have been brought down from heaven by a dove to be used in the coronation of King Clovis; and it came to symbolize the divine right of kings to rule their people. From generation to generation every king of France was thus annointed and it seemed as though the power of the Kings of France was somehow dependent upon the contents of la sainte ampoule.

Well, you know how one thing leads to another. I was fascinated by this book and I wondered what had become of la sainte ampoule. This led me to one of the strange doings of the French Revolution, a natural enough sequence as the ideas of La Boetie and Montaigne and Voltaire and so on form a chain which inevitably must have led to some such explosion.

And so, one day in Paris there gathered together a huge crowd. The enthusiasm was at its highest pitch; not a seat was empty in the vast amphitheatre where these strange proceedings took place. Out in the open space was what looked like an ancient altar or the butt of some prehistoric oak. A dignitary solemnly stepped forward and placed upon the smooth flat surface a small leaden-colored phial not much larger than a pear. It was la sainte ampoule. Amidst an awesome silence a blacksmith approached with a massive sledgehammer. With one great resounding blow la sainte ampoule was smashed to pieces. The crowd was beside itself with joy. They danced and hugged one another. At last tyranny had been exterminated and they were really free.

What a lesson this should be to all of us. How easily is man deluded and beguiled by symbols and symbolic acts. Material things come and they go but the spirit, the essence of humanity, continues on. Think now and then of our friend La Boetie and la sainte ampoule as I proceed.

With the passage of years most of us come to perceive certain significant trends in the course of human affairs. Things we had been taught in our youth, bits of history and patterns of behavior seem to take on a new significance. I well remember the day when, only a few years ago, I was reading a book on the history of philosophy. Each new philosopher down through the ages seemed to be inventing a new terminology and the classification of groups and schools was bewildering. It all seemed so unnecessary and egotistical. Then the thought occurred to me that perhaps from one age to another the problems were different and that underneath these changes of terminology and descriptions of the different philosophical doctrines there was a groping for some solution of the particular, current problems with which mankind was faced as one school of philosophers succeeded another. However that may be, it is clear to me that people all over the world in the last few years have developed an almost morbid interest in security. Surely there is nothing strange about this when we consider what has been happening during the lives of even the youngest among us here today.

I was talking recently with a man in charge of the Personnel Division of one of the large manufacturing concerns and he told me as the young men just out of college applied for their jobs a good many of them seemed especially interested in the age of retirement, the pension rights and matters of that sort.

What few people seem to realize is that practically everybody gets most of his fun out of his work, and this goes for the women as well as the men of course.

For professional men such as architects, engineers, lawyers, doctors and so on, the proposition is almost self-evident. Think of the thrill that must come to a young surgeon as he begins to master the special skills and techniques of his profession. The sense of power and achievement and the continuous growth, which only experience and application can bring about, lead him on, as it were, from one adventure to another.

Picture in your minds the lawyer preparing for the cross-examination of some utterly unscrupulous person of exceptional intelligence who is playing for high stakes and who has developed a pat story which covers every phase of the transaction involved in some court proceeding. The task of mastering all the intricate details, studying the personal traits of the witness and of the jurors and of the judge and then planning a series of questions to break the witness and lay bare the truth is just about as exciting and stirring an experience as one could well imagine. The subtlety of it, the infinite variety of forces, great and small, which affect human beings as they prey upon one another either in the marts of trade or the pursuit of criminal purposes call for the highest quality of imaginative work, great flexibility of mind and tenacity of purpose.

But the same principle applies to people in every walk of life whatever their employment or their trade or occupation. Superficially, it looks as though the engineers and the chemists and the infinite variety of research workers had the best of it. But nothing pleases me so much as to talk to a carpenter or a fisherman about the details of his work. I remember once sitting around in Harwichport on Cape Cod talking with the men who were getting their gear ready for an early start the next morning for the fishing grounds. There is always just the right way to set a hook, just the right way to put on the bait and just the right way to do an infinite amount of other little things that seem to the rest of us to be merely routine, except that when we try to do any one of them we always seem to have a special knack for doing it wrong.

Some years ago I had a bayman working for me on Long Island named John Raynor. Every once in a while we used to go off the beach in a dory to do some fishing. As we stood there on the beach I could not see how we could ever get the little dory out through the breakers. They came in one on top of another and I was sure we would be swamped. But he stood there calmly watching the waves for perhaps two or three minutes and then he would say "here we go" and we would push the dory out into the ocean, hop in and we were off. The first thing I knew we were out beyond the breakers and not one of them had come anywhere near us. His skill and experience was such that he could tell the sequence of the waves and he knew just the instant of time when conditions were exactly right for that little trip of four or five hundred yards through what appeared to a mass of white water.

SHINANO: The Jinx Carrier*

By Lynn Moore, '48

"After the pyramids of Egypt and the Great Wall of China were the three ships of Yamato: wonders of the world, yet like the lofty pyramids and the long wall, great follies indeed."

It is a wiser, certainly healthier nation that can today say this of the largest warships ever built, and see in them a symbol of Japan's futile and tragic war effort.

The 64,000-ton, 18-inch gunned super-dreadnoughts Yamato and Musashi have come in for all the post-war spotlight on this remarkable class of ships. The suicidal dash of the former during the Okinawa operation and her agonized sinking, just five months after Musashi's fatal enounter with U.S. carrier planes in the Battle for Leyte Gulf, attracted the attention of readers in Japan and the United States.

But the huge Shinano, third ship of the fabulous Yamato-class later converted into the largest aircraft carrier ever built by a world sea power, has been all but forgotten. Few Japanese were aware of her top secret wartime construction. All the documents relating to her construction were destroyed. Not even a photograph escaped the pre-surrender burning of the Imperial Naval Technical Bureau archives. When the Allied Occupation arrived in September, 1945, Shinano was only a memory in the minds of the few who had helped build her or who had survived her sinking.

Unlike her veteran sisters, Shinano met an ignominious end less than a day after setting sail on her maiden voyage.

Her story, then, is not in her operations but rather in her conception and construction—a four year process during which tens of millions of yen and long hours of labor were needlessly expended in the creation of what was then thought would be a "majestic and unperishable castle of the seas," but which ended up instead an unsalvable mass of scrap at the hands of an alert American submarine, the largest single underseas kill of World War II.

Shinano seemed jinxed from her birth in the spring of 1940. No sooner had work started on her complicated hull than orders came to slow down. With war a distinct possibility shipbuilding efforts had to be channelled to the more urgent aircraft carrier program.

Shinano was all but forgotten by the Imperial Staff until the Pearl Harbor and Malaya actions brought battleship construction back into the limelight. Air-minded Japanese argued that U.S. and British capital ship losses to carrier-based aircraft during the first days of the war emphasized the futility of putting tremendous efforts into the building of Yamato-class battleships. This point of view won out. It was decided to drastically cut down on Shinano's building.

If Pearl Harbor cast doubts upon Shinano's value to the Empire, it was the Battle of Midway that saved the ship. Midway had a profound effect upon Japanese carrier design. In the momentous fourth of June battle, 1942, aircraft from Enterprise, Hornet and Yorktown dealt Admiral Nagumo's fast carrier striking force a blow from which the Imperial Navy never quite recovered. Four carriers, Akagi, Kaga, Hiryu and Soryu, their flight decks cluttered with aircraft rearming and refueling, were hit by American divebombers. Three of the Japanese ships, burning deadly gasoline and ammunition fires, were abandoned; a fourth, mortally wounded, was finished off by a patrolling American submarine.

When the Combined Fleet limped back into Japanese waters the Imperial Staff was already planning new carrier construction. Midway had pointed out serious short-comings in Japanese carrier design. It was the opinion of some survivors that the answer to American dive-bombing attacks lay in constructing carriers with heavily armored flight decks and better protected fuel and ammunition stowage spaces. Damage control methods, already at peak efficiency in the Imperial Navy, also came in for close consideration, with Midway

Lynn Moore's article on the ill-fated Shinano was inspired by another Middlebury naval enthusiast, Howard V. Young, '47, now teaching history at Hampton College, Va. Mr. Young asked the author if he could find a photograph of the Japanese mystery carrier. Journalist First Class Moore, then on duty with Commander Naval Forces, Far East, Staff Historical Section, was not able to find a photograph of Shinano. But in the four months he and his wife, Keiko, interviewed former Japanese naval officers, they pieced together this story of the largest warship ever constructed. It was published as a research paper in the February, 1953, U.S. Naval Institute Proceedings.

After Marine Corps duty in China following World War II, Lynn Moore returned to Middlebury, receiving his degree in 1948. After graduation he did post graduate work at London University and the University of Colorado.

Enlisting in the regular Navy a few weeks after the outbreak of hostilities in Korea, he served with the Pacific Fleet Combat Camera Group in Korea and in the COMNAVFE Staff Historical Section in Tokyo.

While in Japan, Journalist First Class Moore married Miss Keiko Hiratsuka, daughter of Unichi Hiratsuka, a wood-block artist.

Lynn Moore and his wife live in Washington, D. C., where he is on duty in the Motion Picture Script Section of the Naval Photographic Center.

veterans suggesting improvements in ordnance handling and fire-fighting methods.

But the Imperial Staff recognized that construction of carriers embodying lessons learned at Midway would be a long-term project. Even with top priorities few of the new ships would be ready for combat before mid-1945. And 1945, some feared, might be too late.

Attention was therefore focused upon existing ships capable of modification. Anything that could conceivably serve as a flight platform was considered a candidate for conversion. Prominent among these ships was Shinano.

Although designers responsible for Shinano's conversion had an extremely difficult time reconciling conflicting points of view, final plans calling for a 68,000-ton aircraft carrier were ready in September, 1942.

By any standard a 68,000-ton warship is a leviathan. America's largest battleship, the Iowa-class, displaces 45,000-tons. The largest U.S. aircraft carriers of the Midway-class have 45,000-ton displacements. The great James V. Forrestal-class super-carrier is designed to displace 59,900-tons.

But in Shinano's ambitious design were the seeds of her own construction. She was a compromise. She was too hastily rushed to completion.

A great deal of enthusiasm went into Shinano's building. Even the top secret classification failed to keep yard workers from taking unusual interest in the conversion. To some the rejuvenated ship became a symbol and a hope.

Conversion of the former Yamato-class battleship into a carrier proved almost as big a job as a new construction. From keel to main deck Shinano was essentially Yamato, with double and triple bottoms, armored bulges below the waterline, and heavily armored magazines, steering [Continued on page 17]

Eleanor Ross Thomas, '95

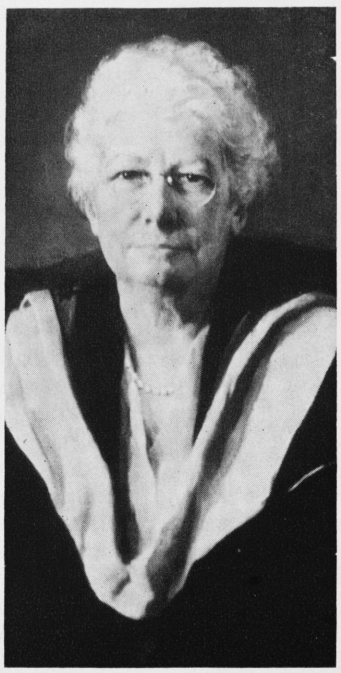
THE death of Eleanor Ross Thomas has brought a deep feeling of sadness to Alumnae and a poignant realization of the debt of gratitude which all generations of the College, future as well as past, owe permanently to her for her contribution during twenty-nine years as Dean of Women.

A woman of unusual administrative ability, she had, as well, a rare gift for understanding and wise counsel. Those closely associated with her showed deep appreciation for the fact that not only students found her guidance helpful, but many older people in responsible positions sought her advice and relied with respect on her judgment. She was influenced strongly by her fundamental belief that the true purpose of a college is academic. Her outstanding abilities and her unswerving devotion to the principles of scholarship won for her respect and recognition among educators as one of the foremost Deans of Women, and built a reputation for the Women's College that was unique for so small a college.

Eleanor Ross was born in Rutland, Vermont in 1874 and graduated from Middlebury in 1895. She was a teacher in schools in Rutland, Vermont, in North Wales, Pennsylvania, and in Boise, Idaho until 1915 when she became Assistant Professor of English and Dean of Women at Middlebury. From 1916 until her retirement in 1944 she was Dean of Women. In June 1949 she married Dr. John M. Thomas, a former President of Middlebury, whose death occurred in February 1952. Those who loved her will always be glad for her quiet happiness in the companionship of this brief marriage after a long life devoted selflessly to the welfare of others.

With a dedication that is characteristic only of those who are truly great, she quietly and constantly during the greater part of her life devoted her efforts to her family and the college.

A truly "giving" person who subordinated her own life to others, she cloaked this with an appearance of austerity and formal dignity that was misleading to some, but, as alumnae of all years reminisce, their anecdotes reveal her intuitive understanding and her warmth and sense of humor.



Looking back to first impressions, most Alumnae will vividly remember being overawed as freshmen by the high standards she set—both for scholarship and for student life. One can only believe that the development of character and of a sense of responsibility were an integral part of her concept of education, along with the acquiring of knowledge.

But her methods were not dogmatic, nor were her standards based on narrow conventions. Older Alumnae tell of incidents where her independent thinking and common sense led to decisions that were startlingly modern for their time; and many Alumnae now realize that it was only later that they truly appreciated how she won them over by the method of her appeal when an arbitrary rule would have had much less influence upon them.

In this year of 1953 it is difficult to visualize the problems and obstacles encountered by a Dean who bridged the years from 1915 to 1944. Customs have changed so much during the period that the conventions that restricted women in college in the early years have been forgotten. But all Alumnae will be delighted and will applaud the story one tells of the great scandal that broke in town when in 1918 some of the girls dared to ride horseback astride (in their bloomers and middies) rather than sidesaddle. A serious situation developed between the townspeople and the College. Indignation was running high and there was serious criticism of the girls' modesty when the complaint was brought to Miss Ross, who firmly stated: "Nonsense! The only sensible way for a girl to ride is astride!"

In those early years, too, women often faced traditional prejudices in choosing their careers, for careers that were considered suitable for women were very restricted. Many Alumnae who have enjoyed successful and satisfying careers look back now with gratitude and appreciation to the support she gave them when they wavered against the odds of facing severe public criticism. In these days when a girl may chose a profession or career with thought only for her ability and interest, this is difficult to understand, but there are many who will never forget the courage and foresight with which she encouraged them and supported them when necessary.

Countless Alumnae of all years tell, with a still somewhat startled look, of times when she invited them to her home or to her office and gently opened a discussion of some personal problem about which they had been worrying but which they had discussed with no one. Many give tribute to how much her ability to discern these internal conflicts without being told, together with her understanding helpfulness, meant to them at times when they needed this help badly.

Others still marvel at her ability to see in them as undergraduates unsuspected qualities and talents that caused her to suggest that they prepare for careers or professions which would not have occured to them, but in which they have since attained great success.

To the time of her retirement, she saw each girl as a separate personality and took a sincere interest in her individual problems. This interest was so personal that even after a lapse of years she would greet a girl almost instantly by name and discuss her special [Continued on page 18] that really makes hard work for students is the way literary figures put pepper and salt in their work by using words which represent the special terminology of masons or painters or textile workers or what not. When you are translating from French or German or any other language, it is a baffling task to do any sort of job of rendering into English the work of some master craftsman when the dictionary turns up a series of words, the meaning of which remains completely obscure. But they all do it and it works. This sort of thing adds character and finish to a piece of literature and I ask you to reflect upon the satisfaction which must come to those who coin and use these special words. Everyone likes to spread an air of mystery about his skills. People complain about the doctors writing their prescriptions for aspirin and bicarbonate of soda in Latin; and the lawyers are supposed to have developed a special jargon to mystify the population in general and increase the size of their fees. But I tell you that this is just one of the ways used from the dawn of history by the human animal for his own pleasure and gratification. That is one of the ways we all have fun. And, incidentally, it is one of the reasons why it is so difficult to get the children of those who live in homes where a foreign language is spoken to master the English language and stand forth as little Americans rather than as little Italians or little Porto Ricans. They simply cannot resist the advantage they have over the other little boys and girls in school and on the streets when they use words and converse in a tongue which the others do not understand.

I tried one of these Wage and Hour cases a few years ago. It involved the classifications of the workers in the RCA plant at Camden, New Jersey. One would suppose that a case of this sort would be as dry as dust; but it wasn't. You should have heard some of those men telling me about capacitors and transformers and the way they processed the work in the plant so that each individual operation might be done with the greatest economy in the use of time and materials. One of the men had received several increases in pay for improvements that he had developed and I can still see the flush on his cheek and the sparkle in his eye as he told me about them.

I don't know whether I have put my idea across or not. What I have been trying to do is to persuade you that just about the worst thing the average man or woman can do is to get in the frame of mind where he or she is thinking all the time about security. It is just like taking dope. If you keep thinking about security long enough, especially when you are under fifty, you begin to live in a topsy-turvy world. You come to think about things as fun which are really not fun at all, and you wind up leading a more or less wretched existence all the while telling yourself what a gorgeous time you are having without really believing it. Happiness in life for you lies in the mastery of the field in which you choose to work.

We are all born with certain innate capacities. One of the most important of these and one possessed by everyone is the capacity for growth. It beats the dickens how it works. From day to day right on through our whole lives we either grow or we do the reverse of growing—we shrivel up. In the very nature of things it is impossible to stand still and hold on to what you have. Your capacities increase or they diminish. It took me a long time to discover this just as it took me a long time to discover the other proposition that you really get most of your fun out of your work.

And so I leave you with this parting word. There is plenty of time for you to think about security in the years ahead. Forget about it now.

engine rooms, machinery and fuel spaces. Onto this it was planned to graft the structure of an aircraft carrier, complete with armored flight deck, island superstructure, hangar deck and aircraft repair and ordnance stowage spaces.

Great emphasis was placed on armor protection. A four-inch thick armored flight deck was constructed to withstand the blast of a 1,000-pound bomb. It was hoped her armored sides would stand up to torpedoes, too. When finished, one third of the carrier's 68,000-ton trail displacement consisted of defensive armor.

Despite its great size Shinano was designed to carry only 42 aircraft. Vast storage spaces, however, enabled her to supply many more, for Shinano was more an aircraft tender than carrier.

Conceived as a compromise and constructed with fervor and purpose, Shinano was rushed to a sudden end by an early, almost premature launching. Up to the time of the Marianas operation, Shinano was expected to be finished by the spring of 1945. But the June 19th, 1944, Marianas "Turkey Shoot" was accompanied by the sinking of two of the Imperial Navy's finest aircraft carriers, Taiho and Shokaku. This resulted in reintensified activity at Yokosuka. Leyte Gulf losses and further decimation of the Japanese Navy came as added reminders that Shinano's construction must be finished to fill gaps in the rapidly crumbling line of defense.

Shinano was launched on November 11, 1944, and commissioned eight days later. Soon afterwards, her captain was ordered to take his untrained crew to Kure and there pick up the ship's air complement.

Shinano sailed from Yokosuka at 1800, November 28th, with yard workers still hard at work aboard. Three destroyers escorted the carrier as she sailed into Tokyo Bay on her maiden voyage, "a half moon shimmering on the waves."

Meanwhile, the American submarine Archerfish, released from B-29 lifeguard duties for the night, moved in to play the final role in Shinano's jinxed career. Looking for Japanese shipping in the Tokyo Bay area, Commander J. F. Enright, skipper of the Archerfish, picked up Shinano on radar while running surfaced late in the evening. He maneuvered his boat in for the kill. Commander Enright fired six torpedoes as the unwary carrier crossed his firing line. Four struck home. As the destroyers moved in to contact Archerfish, the submarine evaded, confident she had dealt a mortal blow to a large carrier—how large Commander Enright would not find out until the war was over.

At 0317 Shinano began her death throes. They lasted until late the following morning. Confident that Shinano, like her sister ships, was invulnerable, her captain kept the ship's speed at 18-knots over the rough seas. But in the damage control parties working below it soon became evident that Shinano was in trouble, serious trouble. Due to the ship's hasty construction, water-tight doors had not yet been fitted to some of the threatened compartments. Moreover, as the ship churned through the seas at 18-knots, water made considerable headway below the waterline. The green damage control crews, hastily recruited from the bottom of the manpower barrel for carrier duty, could not keep the water back. Counter-flooding pipes were not able to right the heavily listing ship; this a design deficiency.

Apprised of developments below, the captain reduced Shinano's speed. But it was too late. The sea had the upper hand now. By 10 o'clock in the morning Shinano had listed to such a precarious angle that the captain was forced to order abandon ship. Half of the 1,400-man crew escaped as the captain retired to his cabin to join his ancestors. A few minutes later Shinano capsized and settled noisily into the sea.

If there was any hope left for an ultimate victory of the Empire, that hope settled to the bottom of the Pacific with Shinano on this cold November morning. For those who had watched the great ship grow, from its wartime conversion after Midway, the war was indeed over.

As Toshikazu Kase was to say much later in the postscript to his book, Journey to the Missouri, Shinano's disaster was symbolic of Japan's war effort. He wrote:

We built a fine ship and took much pride in her. She looked like a majestic and unperishable castle of the seas. But she was sunk before she fired a shot. There is more than a touch of irony in the fate of the Shinano. For a poor country like Japan the construction of costly warships meant a crushing burden upon the national treasury. And yet we built a good number of them. We also maintained a vast Army and an ever expanding Air Force. In the end we became like the mammoth whose tusks, growing ever bigger, finally unbalanced its bodily structure. As everything went to support the huge tusks, very little was left to sustain the rest of the body. The mammoth finally became extinct. . . The Shinano was indeed a child of misfortune and her fate symbolic of the tragic decade just now closed with our capitulation.

interests. Many realize that it was only through her personal efforts that they received financial help that enabled them to continue at school. Perhaps not so many realize how much she was responsible for many things they took for granted in college. For often, as a true leader, she suggested the ideas that others developed. Nothing was too much for her that concerned the welfare of the students. Though, as an able administrator, she was responsible for important planning, she followed through on details without sparing herself. Many girls who have enjoyed living in Forest Hall are unaware of the fact that she went so far as to try out beds and furniture in her own home in planning for their comfort and convenience.

In the history of the Women's College, her contribution to all phases of the development of the college will always remain unique.

Probably no one misses her more or knew her better than Mrs. Charles Burrage, whose close friendship and association with her extended over the full period from when she was first appointed. Mrs. Burrage, who also has a warm place in the hearts of Alumnae, says of her:

"Just fifty years ago when I came to Middlebury, there was no Dean of Women at the College, though the need was strongly felt. Finally in 1909 one was appointed and from then until 1915 three different women held that office. All were able women and each contributed to the welfare of the College, but no one of them fulfilled all the requirements for success in the administration of that office. That success was not reached until the coming of Eleanor Ross in 1915. It certainly was reached then.

"Eleanor Ross understood and loved the College to which she returned, and she brought to her work a rare wisdom which she had already displayed in various teaching positions previously held.

"From that time until her retirement in 1944, it was my rare privilege to serve with her on many College committees. In all this close association I had a chance to see and evaluate the working of her mind. Before any meeting she apparently weighed most carefully the pros and cons of any action and her final verdict was with rare exceptions the wise one and the one eventually adopted by the meeting. But she always wished to hear all sides of the question and did not fail to change her own opinion if she felt it had been fairly proved that she should. She was a lesson to all in her wise judgment.

"Another quality that made her the perfect dean was her great love and deep understanding of all her students. Many may have feared her a bit and hesitated to go to her with their troubles, but they went in spite of their fear and always found her a true friend and an understanding one on whom they could rely. She never failed them.

"I have known many deans in other colleges but she is one of the few who fulfilled all the requirements of that office so completely and so bravely.

"Her regal presence and her charm and wit at all public gatherings added prestige to the occasion and were an inspiration to her students.

"Middlebury College owes her a great debt of gratitude."

President Stratton—". . . . Eleanor Ross Thomas has done much for Middlebury. The real strength the Women's College has attained is drawn from the high qualities of her character. She deeply affected the many Alumnae who came under her influence in ways that can never be known because they lie too deep for mere words. Her integrity of character and finess of intellect won for her profound respect; and her heartfelt sympathy with every worthy aspiration was rewarded by the love of all her students. Through the deep impression she has made upon her students, her influence has spread more widely than anyone can realize. . . ."

And "Cap" Wiley, '13, says of her:

" 'Miss Ross' impressed her strong personality, high ideals, and standards on Middlebury in a manner that has been equalled by very few people.

"She had a very keen sense of what was going on and a penetrating way of analyzing and evaluating everyone with whom she worked—both faculty, administration, and students. A desire to have her good opinion doubtless inspired many students, both men and women, to strive for greater accomplishment.

"Her background as a fine Latin teacher gave her an appreciation of the best in scholarship which colored her record as an administrator. In a coeducational college the tendency to plan curricula more for men and let the women adjust accordingly was not accepted by Dean Ross. She battled for special consideration for courses, living accommodations, social life, and standards to meet the needs and interests of college women.

"The fine reputation of the Women's College was built up to a very great extent by her efforts and influence."

Dorothea E. Higgins, '30
National Alumnae President
